In cold type the hot innnig listened something like this: Hewitt, first up, singled down the third base line and was safe on first. Jackson got a single to center, advancing Hewitt to second. Earthman sacrificed the two runners to third and second respectively, and Ketchum drew a base on balls. (X) marks where the big excitement started.

Cates bucked-not | Cates, p..... on going out, but on allowing a left hander to replace him, for left handers are El Paso's bread and meat when they have a batting bee on. Cates protested but nothing doing. Finally big Keplinger, the policeman fan, gave the Cactus league pitcher the sign and Cates retired in favor of Harry Kane.

The Beginning of the End. McCarty was first up. He had struck out twice in the previous sessions, but as a dark horse he was "there." Harry's horseshoe, plus El Paso luck in the lucky seventh, was working, for he bit down the third base way to deep left, scoring Hewitt and Jackson. The score was tied. Tex. Merritt followed. He hit a single where Bill Harper wasn't. This was up next and won his bloody bloomin game by slashing out a high drive to short center, scoring Ketchum from third and McCarty from second, but still they hit the ball. Gowan got a clean double to right field, sending Booles to Flick hald on the leather for another brand of a single, scoring Booles from third. Gowan went to third in the neantime when Hewitt hit the high foul fly which ended the agony with three runs to the good and the game won for all time to come

Decorum to the Wind. The crowd went wild when the batting rally started. Once in the sixth, El Paso got two men on bases and looked to be due, when Duck Gowan got caught at second when he should have more than one run.

But the seventh more than made up for this and other bad breaks the local Mavericks made in the previous innings. The crowd was up on its feet for the entire inning yelling like mad and little McCarty was given an informal silver shower by his admiring friends. The entire team batted around. Seven hits pitchers; three off of Kane and four the tangible reason for the loss of the off of Cates, who smiled the smile of game, but, the lack of spirit, snap "I told you so" when he saw his teammate getting his in the seventh.

El Paso Began Well. El Paso scored the first run in the first inning. Gowan got on with a twobase hit through Denny Ford's territory had advanced the little duck to third with an infield hit. Et Paso scored with a base on balls, went to second on Merritt's single and scored on Gowan's
